14. SECTION III/2. -CHICOM- MILITIA

Communist China is building up its huge militia force of sparetime soldiers to provide an inexhaustible source of replacements for the Army in the event of war, according to the official Weekly Peking Review. Pointing out that modern weapons increased the drain on manpower, an article said "we have to have powerful reserves which can ensure a continuous supply of manpower and materials to meet war needs." The article said it was the Chinese Communist Party's unshakable policy to turn all the people into soldiers.

No precise figures are available here for the strength of the militia, whose members include both men and women. They are in addition to China's regular force, the People's Liberation Army, which is the largest army in the world with an estimated strength of more than 2,500,000. (REUTERS 41, 7 Feb) (U)
